July 1 - 7

I spent a couple of days in St. Louis before returning home to enjoy Independence Day. 'Enjoy' can be very subjective. I 'enjoyed' the day getting caught up on lots of housework. I really hadn't planned on doing anything this year for the holiday, but my friends finally won me over, and I met up with them about 7 p.m. to hang out and watch the fireworks at the lake. It was a great day for being out this year, sunny and hot and just warm enough for me to wear a tube top that one of my guy friends thought would look great! This after I told him that my latest doctor visit had me measured at 15,500cc+ per boob. 20K looks like it's possible if I choose. We'll see. . . . Going from 11-12K to 15+ really has gotten easier and easier. Back to the lake: No place better to have a good time with friends. We had so much fun!!! I even brought a bikini, but we didn't go in the water. However I did get sprayed with a water bottle by 'accident.'

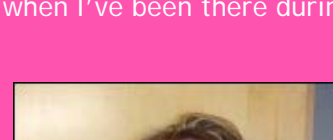

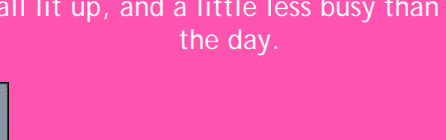

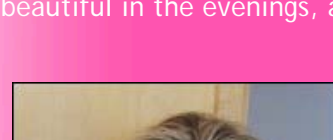

Then, the next day a friend and I hit the road for South Dakota to visit some mutual friends for the weekend. We had a ball, and it went by very fast.

Sunday, we headed out a little later than originally planned, and we paid for it. We got caught in a storm which followed us the whole way home, sometimes getting pretty bad. I got home much later than expected and I was really dreading my early 5 a.m. flight to NY the next morning. Needless to say, once home, I got right to packing. I managed a few hours sleep before heading out.

July 8 - 31

The rest of the month I was busy, busy, busy. After New York, I was then in L.A., Boston, Washington D.C., Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and Chicago. I had a few hiccups in my travels, like a canceled flight home from NY due to weather, so I had to spend an extra night there. In Philadelphia my flight was delayed, so the airline called and rescheduled me on another flight on another airline, so I had to walk to the new terminal where that one was departing. As soon as I got to that terminal, the fire alarm was sounding, and the lights and power were out. Finally the alarm ended, and I learned the terminal had been struck by lightning. The flight couldn't depart until the power was back on. So then the airline called and rebooked me on another flight. Back at the "other" terminal, I learned I was on the last flight to Chicago, and that one was delayed also, waiting for the computer system to get back online after the lightning strike. It took a few extra hours, but I finally made it to Chicago. But when I arrived in Chicago, my bags didn't, so I had to wait almost an entire day before getting my bags. I had to reschedule a bunch of stuff, which was a headache, but thankfully everyone was very understanding. On the fun side, earlier on this east coast swing, I was able to get out and visit some of the sites in D.C., which I have to say is very beautiful in the evenings, all lit up, and a little less busy than when I've been there during the day.

Had to stop at the grocery store where I had a funny in the produce dept. and saw some incredibly oversized watermelons. I do love asking the produce guys if they have anything bigger in the back room while there eyes go back and forth from the melon I'm holding to the ones hanging from my chest:) Always thought it would be cool if I wore a watermelon shirt and stood next to the watermelon bin and if guys would notice the difference or mistakenly grab my boobs!

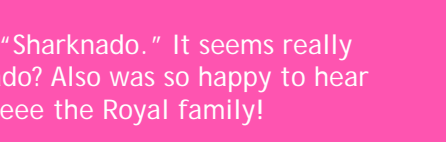

Guys will joke sometimes that they want to squeeze/touch my big tits to see if they're 'ripe.' The majority of them don't know that when they touch or squeeze, that simply makes them bigger!

Also while on the road I saw all the hype about the movie "Sharknado." It seems really goofy and got me thinking: How about Boobnado or BigTitsnado? Also was so happy to hear about Kate and William and baby George! Loveeeeeeeee the Royal family!

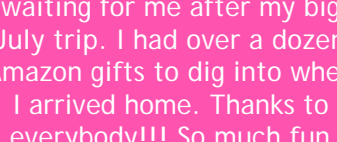

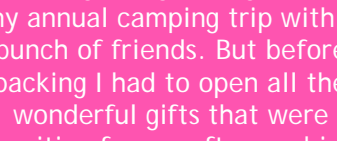

August 1 - 9

I was soooo looking forward to the beginning of August for my annual camping trip with a bunch of friends. But before packing I had to open all the wonderful gifts that were waiting for me after my big July trip. I had over a dozen Amazon gifts to dig into when I arrived home. Thanks to everybody!!!! So much fun stuff! Even some I could take camping. So after I packed up my camping gear and things it was time to hit the road for the 5 hour drive north to the north shore of Lake Superior, in the Boundary Waters Canoe area near Canada.

Just love boutiquing, rocking and hiking. Where else can you have wild rice pizza, kraut and sausage tacos, and amazing fresh fish, just out of the lake? The days were beautiful and sunny, and nights in the low fifties, perfect for curling up under the blankets alone or with a special someone (or two:)). Not sure why there are more stars in the skies up there at night than at home, but I've never seen more. We enjoyed s'mores every night, and grilled veggies and brats, burgers, fish and steaks over the campfire.

I tried to enjoy every last day of camping I could. So I didn't leave much time for unpacking as I had to do laundry and pack again for hitting the road. But first a trip to the Mall of America to meet with a couple of friends and do a little shopping. Morning is best though because too many fans seem to be there later in the day which can be too much attention for my friends. We had a great time and not too many photo stops were needed. Next up I had a stop in Atlanta before a return trip to Heartbeats in Battle Creek, Michigan. The club owner had kept telling me how he had done so much remodeling, so I was looking forward to checking it out. I was hoping it would be a larger club now, that didn't quite happen, it was the same size. But the exterior of the building had been redone, as well as the interior walls, furniture, etc., did look spectacular! A lot of the same girls were there too, so it was great chatting and catching up with them. And thanks to all the fans! You really packed the place again!!!

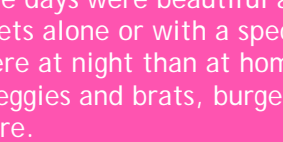

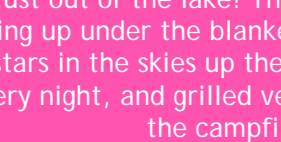

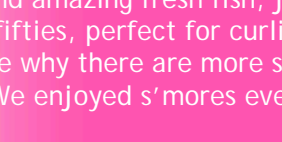

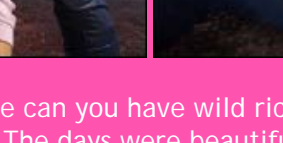

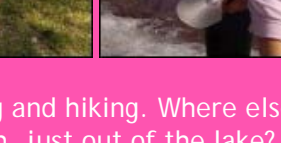

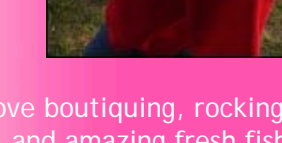

The weekend went by very quickly and before I knew it Sunday had arrived and I was back in the air. This time, after my last stage set, I had barely enough time to shower and clean up, before hopping on a plane. I was heading to San Francisco for a couple of days. From there I went directly to Las Vegas!

I was in Vegas for a few days and met with a bunch of new and old friends. I was excited that Dick and Jane were in town, and we made plans to meet up. We had a great dinner and drinks which took like 3 hours. Wow we were having such a great time as usual! We finally decided to move the fun to the hotel bar. I had a night full of Mojitos and laughs getting caught up. I never get enough of them! Jane and I did draw a bit of attention with our big boobs and stopped for photos every now and again for booty loving people (including our waitress!).

After that, I managed to get home for a couple of days to unpack/repack before heading to Seattle for a few days, and then on to New York from there. My frequent flier miles are really racking up now. Love the word 'RACK'. I've got to be close to the million-mile club now! Speaking of millions, there seemed to be about that many people at the Minnesota State Fair. I even got squirted! More on that later!
